

Selected Research Papers in Education, Labour Market and Criminology

This volume summarizes the presentations of the Nuremberg-Krakow-Linz-Skopje-Research Seminar 2007. The main aim of the research seminar was to bring together young scientists of different universities and to enable them to present their research results under the supervision of senior researchers and professors.

The papers cover different fields reflecting the main research areas of the participating institutions. They discuss central issues like education for a multicultural society and they report on concrete empirical research – based on surveys as well as on experiments.

Central issues are: education, multicultural society, participation in school and child development, educational expenditures of households, innovative methods of university teaching, downward mobility, flexicurity, social and individual norms of fairness, stalking.
